Public Notice. Specific gases have been treated as a separate product category given their distinct characteristics and differences in demand and supply conditions from industrial and medical gases. In India, the Parties supply gases in the following categories: Industrial gases (including oxygen, nitrogen, argon, helium, neon, and xenon); (ii) packaged cylinders (comprising of gases like hydrogen, acetylene, ethylene, propylene, butadiene, butane, propane, and various other gases); and (iii) high purity gases. Specifically, gases are supplied only to cylinders and not through the tonnage and mobile containers. The geographic markets for specialty gases are national, given their high value and the consequent feasibility of transporting across wide distances without significantly adding to price. A vast majority of these gases are imported into India.
